

Summary of changes for action item #5 related to the composition of Educational Affairs Committee (EAC)

Why? As mandated in the Bylaws, “The distribution of representation among the schools and colleges shall be reexamined every three years, taking into consideration the proportion of undergraduate enrollment.” EAC was last updated in 2008 as part of a broader restructuring of a number of committees. As a result, there has been at least three iterations where EAC composition has not revisited much less adjusted to reflect the current student population.

How? The Statues, Bylaws, and Committees Committee (SBC) reviewed the current membership against the changes in student membership since 2010. SBC received input from the EAC on the changes. This resulted in the proposed changes of adding members from Terry, Engineering and CAESs. Franklin Arts and Sciences now has two members.

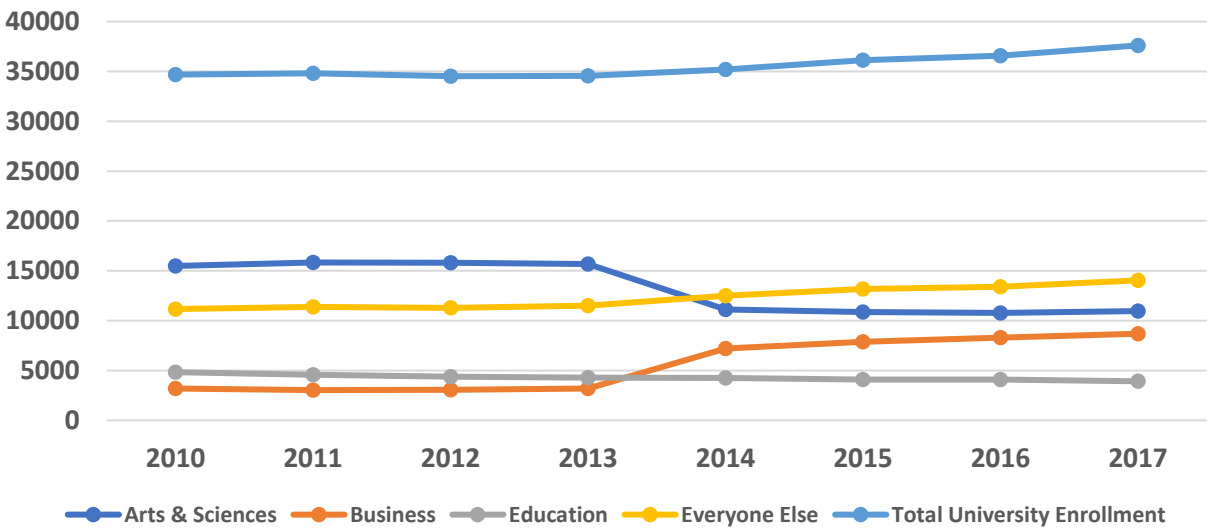

So why this composition?

- It reflects UGA evolving as an institution with new programs and majors in a number of colleges increasing these programs portion of the student population. i.e. The student population is starting to flatten out in terms of major.
- It recognizes the change in 2014 where students seeking entrance into a certain type of degree programs were allotted to the college whose program they were seeking. For example, the numbers no longer treated a pre-business student, as being anything other than a business student. Similar for Journalism & Mass Communication students and other majors.
- It recognizes that although not necessarily losing a high number of students, Franklin Arts and Science associated degrees have remained flat outside of the 2014 reclassification as the rest of the UGA has matured. When compared to the growth trend of UGA, this places Franklin Arts and Science as having a declining trend of percent total student population.
- It recognizes that the loss of student numbers seeking Education associated degrees. When compared to the growth trend of UGA, Education shows a declining trend of total student population.
- Coincidentally, the trends with undergraduate population are also seen with the overall student population. With the EAC dealing with graduate issues in addition to others, this adjustment of the EAC membership would be somewhat representative of the graduate student population.
