Dear Colleagues:

The attached proposal to make the following changes to combine programs in the Franklin College of Arts and Sciences will be an agenda item for the March 25, 2016, Full University Curriculum Committee meeting:

Change the name of the major in Chinese Language and Literature (A.B.) to Asian Languages and Literature (A.B.)

Create a new Area of Emphasis in Chinese under the major in Asian Languages and Literature (A.B.)

Create a new Area of Emphasis in Japanese under the major in Asian Languages and Literature (A.B.)

Create a new Area of Emphasis in Korean under the major in Asian Languages and Literature (A.B.)

Terminate the major in Japanese Language and Literature (A.B.)

Sincerely,

William K. Vencill, Chair
University Curriculum Committee

The University of Georgia

Franklin College of Arts and Sciences
Comparative Literature Department

The Comparative Literature Department would like to submit this proposal of a degree merger (Chinese and Japanese majors) into a new A.B degree: Asian Languages and Literature, A.B. The rationale follows from concerns from the Board of Regents and the College of Arts and Sciences that both majors were not graduating an average of ten graduates in three years. A recommendation was made to the College in the 2015 fall semester to terminate both majors but the College proposed (same time) a merger that would include other Asian programs in the Department (Korean with prospects in the future for Vietnamese, and Hindi). The Department met and faculty agreed to support the proposal of a merger from the College.

The merits of the merger include the fact that it would allow the Department to maintain the interest shown for these majors by students interested in the study of Asia and other career goals. Many of our graduates have secured prominent positions in global companies, agencies and institutions. The majors are also an attraction to students from units across campus particularly the Business School, the Colleges of International and Public Affairs and Journalism, and the Honors Program.

The proposal by the College was accepted by the Academic Systems at the beginning of this semester. With that, the Department embarked on the proposal before you for the merger. It is my hope that the proposal will be well received by your committee.

Sincerely,

Lioba Moshi
University Professor and Department Head.

NAME CHANGE JUSTIFICATION FORM

School/College Name: Franklin College of Arts and Sciences

Department Name: Comparative Literature

Major Name Changes:

Current Major Name:	Degree	Proposed Major Name:	Degree
Chinese Language and Literature	A.B.	Asian Languages and Literature	A.B.

JUSTIFICATION:

See attached Justification Page

Asian Languages and Literature (A.B.)
Justification of Proposed Name Change

The Comparative Literature Department would like to combine the existing major in Chinese Language and Literature (A.B.) and the existing major in Japanese Language and Literature (A.B.) with select Korean courses into a major in Asian Languages and Literature (A.B.).

The merits of the merger include the fact that it would allow the department to maintain the interest shown for these majors by students interested in the study of Asia and other career goals. Many of our graduates have secured prominent positions in global companies, agencies, and institutions. The majors are also an attraction to students from units across campus, particularly the College of Business, the College of Public and International Affairs, the College of Journalism and Mass Communication, and the Honors Program.
